THE NOBLE FAMILY

by

Mrs. T. H. Bowles

Stephen Noble was born 1770-1780 in Virginia. (1830 and 1840 census). He died before the 1850 census was taken in Sumter Co., Alabama.

"The Dictionary of Alabama Biography", page 1284:

"Stephen Noble, pioneer farmer, was born in Virginia, removed to Tennessee, then settled in Demopolis in 1817. The first log cabin was built that year, and later four more were added. In 1818, owing to the arrival of the French families composing 'the Vine and Olive' Colony, he removed to Clarke County, Alabama and with his two sons raised a crop in anticipation of the arrival of his wife and remaining children in the Fall. They brought 300 hogs and 75 sheep.

His children were Daniel, Robert (a soldier in the Creek War), Rial (also in Creek War), Joseph, Samuel, S. Pinkney, Martha who married Moses Peyton, Emily who married W. Easley, Elizabeth who married N. Dean and Jane who married M. Pugh."

The first Noble to come to Arkansas was Robert. He brought his wife Eleanor and eight children to Ashley County in 1849. In 1852 Samuel Noble, his second wife and his children by both wives moved to Ashley County from Louisiana after living there five years. The rest of the children of Stephen Noble lived out their lives in Alabama.

From Dec. 1, 1863 to February, 1864, he was on detached service with a supply train of the Division. On March 10, 1865 he was wounded severely in the leg on Darbytown Road near Charles City, Va. He was in the hospital at Richmond, Va. when he was given a furlough of 50 days to visit relatives in Clarke County, Alabama.

"Adventuring With an Unknown Yankee Soldier: A Hundred Years Later"

(An address by Joe C. Shaw at the annual meeting of the Arkansas Historical Association held in Conway, Arkansas, April 30, 1965.)

In every meeting such as this there must be a low point. To provide such a low point, and get it out of the way, is the burden of this paper or, I should say, of its hearers. Was it sociology that was described as "the elaboration of the obvious"? I sought the help of "Bartlett's Quotations" on this, but since sociology was barely invented in Bartlett's day, he was of no help.

At any rate you will be among the first to discover that paper is an exercise in the exaggeration of the commonplace. You will listen in vain for any startling discovery or new insight into our heritage. The provincialism of my historical interest and the superficiality and inadequacy of my scholarship will be apparent in every paragraph, and all I can say in justification is that you might have known what to expect after hearing me try to rescue the wagon yard from oblivion at our Camden meeting a few years ago.

And, more to the point, this paper represents a study undertaken for the sheer fun of it; in fact, that's what history means to me, a non-professional. This study, combining two of my interests, local history and genealogy, has led into devious and interesting paths and has at times given some of the thrills of a detective mystery.

Perhaps two already known facts are re-emphasized by the experiences of this writer:

1. That family tradition is not always reliable as a source of factual historical data, and
2. Historical markers of bronze, stone, or iron, ditto, in italics.

Now to get on with the story. This is about an ordinary private soldier who enlisted in the Union army rather late in the Civil War, and served and died in Arkansas. There is no dearth of information about the outstanding men in our wars; our generals and admirals have been immortalized in biographies, some written by themselves, when no one else thought of it. The brave deeds of the Alvin Yorks and the Colin Kellys have been chronicled, and the generalized common soldier -- North and South -- has received the skillful attention of Dr. Bell Wiley, our speaker of last year's convention.

My concern today is with one of the hundreds of thousands of individuals who attained no fame in their often prosaic duties, received no awards nor promotions, but enlisted in our armies, went where they were sent, did what they were told to do, and died a dull death in a strange land, without a friendly hand to hold to or a loved one's words to console them.

My interest in this soldier came about in this way. Several years ago I married a Yankee woman, a mild form of race-mixing which I trust will bring no cross-burnings in my front yard. This family into which I married had a "black book" in which at least three generations had written the history of the clan. One entry in the book reads as follows:

"William Brock, oldest son of John M. and Margaretta Brock, born Jan. 26, 1830. Lived for the first 23 years of his life in Farmington or vicinity. The next 11 years at Kalamazoo, Michigan, from which place he enlisted, March, 1864, in the 3rd Michigan Cavalry (sic). Died of cholera after an illness of only six hours and is buried with many of his comrades at DuValls (sic) Bluff, Ark. Aug. 30th 1864."

It occurred to me, since I live so near to it, that it would be interesting to find the burial place of this young man and so started a quest that has not yet ended. References in the library of the History Commission indicated that all DeVall's Bluff burials had been moved to the National Cemetery in Little Rock. Inquiries at the National Cemetery revealed no record of the burial of this man.

Having learned in my genealogical contacts that the service record of any Civil War soldier could be obtained from the National Archives, I sent for Pvt. Brock's record, enclosing the requisite dollar. Quite a sheaf of photostatic copies relating to William Brock arrived from the National Archives, including the record of his enlistment, pay data, muster rolls and his honorable discharge (reason: death).

These records gave me my first surprise and presented a mystery, because they gave the place of his death as the Regimental Hospital in Brownsville, Arkansas, rather than DeVall's Bluff. How could this be? For a hundred years the family had thought that he had died and was buried at DeVall's Bluff.

This question set me to wondering as to whether someone in Michigan had done for the 3rd Michigan Cavalry what Major Calvin Collier and Captain John C. Hammock had done for Confederate units -- written a regimental history. Perhaps such a publication would throw some light on this question. So I wrote to a number of historians and historical museums in Michigan inquiring if such a regimental history had been produced and stating my problem.

Both the Kalamazoo County Historical Society and the Michigan Historical Commission responded in a very helpful manner, the former providing me with a photostatic copy of a brief history of the 3rd Michigan as published in a periodical, and the latter making a helpful but, in a way, embarrassing suggestion. George S. May of the (Michigan) Historical Commission gently suggested that I might find some help in an article in the Arkansas Historical Quarterly of 1958 -- an article by Ted R. Worley presenting the diary of Lt. Orville Gillet of the 3rd Michigan Cavalry. Ted lives two or three blocks from me and the Arkansas Room of Teachers College (State College of Arkansas) library is a couple of blocks farther -- and I had to learn what they had to offer from Lansing, Michigan.

This diary of Lt. Gillet (or Sgt. Gillet, as he was at the time under consideration) proved to offer the answer to one of the questions that had been vexing me: How did it happen that Will Brock's family did not know where he died? As I have already said, the writer in the "black book" knew that Pvt. Brock had been stationed at DeValls Bluff, where, according to Hempstead, there were as many as 40,000 Federal troops at one time. They also knew that he died on August 30, 1864. An entry in the aforementioned diary of Sgt. Gillet, edited by Ted Worley, gives a clue as to why the folks at home were unaware of the place of Brock's death.

First, this diary confirms the official record that he was at DeVall's Bluff in August, because Gillet makes several references to his (Gillet's) helping Leggett in Sutler store. Pvt. Brock's record shows he died owing Sutler Leggett $17. (He had received $13. pay during the six months of his service.)

An entry in the diary for August 21 reads: "10 companies of our regiment started for Brownsville, Ark. Co. I and B staid at Remount Camp." Brock had been in Co. L since June 20, so he was doubtless in the group moving to Brownsville. Nine days later he is dead. Obviously, his move and his illness had prevented him from writing home to tell of his new station. Thus the 100-year-old error in his place of death.

It occurred to me, since I live so near to it, that it would be interesting to find the burial place of this young man and so started a quest that has not yet ended. References in the library of the History Commission indicated that all DeVall's Bluff burials had been moved to the National Cemetery in Little Rock. Inquiries at the National Cemetery revealed no record of the burial of this man.

Having learned in my genealogical contacts that the service record of any Civil War soldier could be obtained from the National Archives, I sent for Pvt. Brock's record, enclosing the requisite dollar. Quite a sheaf of photostatic copies relating to William Brock arrived from the National Archives, including the record of his enlistment, pay data, muster rolls and his honorable discharge (reason: death).

Obviously, his move and his illness had prevented him from writing home to tell of his new station. Thus the 100-year-old error in his place of death.

It was in Brownsville, earlier, that the only Civil War action in what is now Lonoke County took place. Here Hempstead reports there was a skirmish on August 25, 1863, and Goodspeed says that a portion of Gen. Steele's Federal forces displaced a small body of Confederates there and soon occupied Little Rock on September 10th of the same year.

According to the History of Kalamazoo County, Michigan, mentioned in the beginning of this paper, the Yankees must have made quite a place of Brownsville, for we read:

"At Brownsville Station the regiment erected a complete set of winter quarters and stables, making quite a town and causing the place to be re-christened 'Michigan City'. The regiment was so healthy that over one thousand men daily reported for duty and less than three per cent were on the sick list."

Parenthetically, I can't help wondering if some author has taken some Civil War facelessness for serious facts when it comes to the health of the 3rd Cavalry. They lost men by sickness everywhere they stopped, including New Madrid, Missouri and DeValls Bluff as well as Brownsville. And the record shows that they lost, during the four years of the war, about 10% of their strength to illness and only 1% to enemy action. It seems highly likely that many of these men often felt as Sgt. Gillet once said he did: "rather out of health".

Whatever may have been the case concerning the salubriousness of Brownsville, the stay of the hundreds of men of the 3rd Michigan Cavalry has seemingly been forgotten. The large centennial marker erected in the community in 1936 makes only this reference to the Civil War: "The Confederate soldiers of Prairie County were enrolled at this point" and old families now in the community have never heard of either Michigan City or of the 3rd Michigan Cavalry.

I have been able to find no burial place in the vicinity where a Federal soldier might be buried. A few miles away 300 Arkansas and Texas Confederates lie in shameful neglect in the Camp Nelson cemetery.

Additional inquiries at the National Cemetery in Little Rock confirmed their earlier reports that no William Brock is buried there. Finally I wrote to the army itself and a letter from the Chief of the Cemetery Branch, Memorial Division reported:

"A check has been made of the interment records maintained in this office and they fail to reveal the interment of the above-named decedent in a National or Army Post Cemetery, Soldiers Lot, Confederate Plot, Confederate Cemetery or the issuance of a government headstone to mark his grave in a private cemetery."

But I shall search on to see if perhaps there cannot be a more satisfying ending to this saga of a young Michigan man who answered the call to the colors, served his country in obscurity but fidelity, suffered and died far from those he loved, who leaves no descendents and whose final resting place is known but to God.

PALESTONE CEMETERY, PULASKI COUNTY, ARKANSAS

by
Tim Anderson

(Ed. Note: This cemetery listing was done by Mr. Anderson for a class in Social Research at State College of Arkansas, under the direction of Joe C. Shaw, instructor.)

Palestone Cemetery is located on the east side of Pulaski County's Clinton Road, six miles north of North Little Rock. This small and timely cemetery is marked by a small sign, made a number of years ago by a man who is now buried there, announcing 'Palestone'. On December 18, 1968, I was able to identify 23 marked graves and I surveyed 36 that held no identification, and was unable to secure any names from any local people in that area.

THE COULTER FAMILY, UNION COUNTY, ARKANSAS

by
Robert W. Worley

David Reddock Coulter was the second son of John M. Coulter and Nancy Reddock Coulter. He was born Sept. 4, 1810 and came to Arkansas in 1836 with his parents and brothers. He married Elizabeth Yoakum of Kentucky about 1831. She was a cousin of Sarah Yoakum, the wife of his brother, Peter Coulter. Elizabeth was born Oct. 11, 1815. They were married Aug. 20, 1835. Elizabeth Coulter died Sept. 14, 1864 and was buried in Union County. David R. Coulter died Aug. 10, 1897 and was buried at Mt. Carmel near Wolf City, Texas. Four generations of this family are buried there.

Union County land records indicate David R. Coulter had extensive land holdings. After the Civil War and his wife's death, he sold his plantation and went to South America. Along with his son, George D. Coulter, he spent about a year in Brazil near the city of Sao Paulo. Upon his return to the States he spent a few years in New Orleans as a cotton broker and later purchased 3,000 acres of land in Hunt Co., Texas and remained there until his death.

We recently visited the Union County homesite of the Coulter family, and all that remains is the well, a few rotted timbers, three tremendous magnolia trees, several crepe myrtle trees and the six graves listed below. They are located in Township 16 South, Range 17 West, Section 33 or 34, Union County, Arkansas. The family cemetery is about three-fourths mile off the Mt. Holly road in the vicinity of the Confederate marker recently installed. It is quite overgrown.

Married Serena Elfranza Matthews, Feb. 14, 1867. After her death, he married Alice Eleanor Dixon, Oct. 18, 1883 at Maxwell, Sharp Co., Ark. He died Oct. 19, 1906, Auvergne, Ark. I found most of this information from the Methodist Conference in Little Rock. I would like to know how to find out about his race for chaplain of the Arkansas legislature. This would have been about 1900 or 1901.

My maternal grandfather, Rufus Philo Jones, married Mary Alice Matthews, July 20, 1876. She was a sister of Serena Matthews, the first wife of my grandfather Noe. Their father was Capt. R. C. Matthews (Robert Calvin), born Sept. 26, 1819, died Mar. 19, 1901, married June 2, 1839 to Nancy Mizelle. I need to know about his Confederate service.

RIDGE - BOYDSTUN

My grandmother, Sina Ann Jane Ridge, was born Oct. 16, 1838, and married my grandfather, John Hall Boydston, May 22, 1855 in Pope Co., Ark. The federal census show that she was born in Arkansas, but I have been unable to find out who were her father and mother. I have always understood that she was related to Major Ridge and John Ridge who were members of the Cherokee tribe of Indians who moved from Tennessee and Georgia long before the Trail of Tears in 1838 and 1839. I will appreciate it if you will help me with this family.

WHITE

My gr-gr-grandfather, William (?) Patterson White, came to Arkansas before 1860 from Tenn., I believe. He went from Arkansas to Eudora, Miss. after 1860. It is said that he leased 1,000 acres of land to the State of Arkansas for school use, possibly between 1850 and 1860. I believe he may have lived in Crittenden, Craighead or Mississippi Co., but cannot locate him in the 1860 census. He had the following children at that time: John Thomas White, born July 12, 1852; William Joseph White, born June 21, 1854; James Alazo White, born June 30, 1856; and Mary Emma White, born June 26, 1860. His wife's name was Ford.
